C. Positions Outside of the University

- 2006-2010 Scientific Director, CIHR – Institute of Health Services and Policy Research (IHSPR). See Part V for details of this role.

PART V: OTHER RELEVANT INFORMATION

The CIHR is a federal agency funding $1 billion annually in health research in Canada. For more information about the CIHR see the CIHR Mission Statement at <http://www.cihr-irsc.gc.ca/e/7263.html>.

In my role as Scientific Director of the Institute for Health Services and Policy Research (IHSPR) I created new research programs aimed at getting research into the hands of decision makers in healthcare policy and practice. I revamped the Partnerships in Health System Improvement (PHSI) funding program to ensure that decision makers are part of research teams throughout the research endeavour from framing the research question all the way to putting results into practice. Under my leadership, IHSPR also launched the new Evidence on Tap program to provide provincial governments with requested health research evidence in a timely manner. Through one-day knowledge exchange sessions with top researchers and rapidly generated knowledge syntheses, provincial policy makers were exposed to research on topics ranging from the development of a patients' bill of rights to the role of government policy in directing health system-wide change. These efforts led to the creation of the Evidence Informed Healthcare Renewal program, a $5.5 million program intended to support policy makers in the lead up to the 2014 expiration of the Health Accord by providing research evidence about health financing, sustainability, governance, and accountability.

My team and I led funding initiatives for cutting-edge research on a number of high-priority topics, including access to appropriate healthcare, drug policy, and health information and through partnerships was able to raise funding to triple what the IHSPR could otherwise invest. I also led the development and partnering for a research strategy on high-quality community-based primary healthcare, the backbone of any high-performing health system, resulting in an investment of $55,000,000 Canadian and the participation of 31 domestic and foreign partners.

Under my leadership, IHSPR also successfully shepherded the Drug Safety & Effectiveness Network from conception to implementation. The result is $10 million in annual funding in perpetuity for post-market drug research across Canada. As a collaborative effort between Health Canada and CIHR, this national network will support and build capacity in order to do rapid and longer-term research on the effect of drugs in patient populations after the point of approval by the regulator.

In addition, I focused attention on the problem of Canada's fragmented health information databases and the complicated privacy regulations that prevent health data from being turned into much-needed research evidence. Our Institute in collaboration with many partners funded priority research on the topic and brought together thought leaders from across the country for a major summit on access to health information, which was parlayed into a the book, Data, Data Everywhere.

Finally, my team and I worked to encourage the growth and development of the health services and policy research community across Canada. We strongly supported inter-disciplinary research that included social and political scientists, economists, biostatisticians, practitioner-researchers, ethicists, informaticists, and innumerable others. Towards the end of my term, I led the Institute and CIHR more broadly in making a concerted effort to increase applications from social scientists and humanities researchers who conduct health-related research and who had previously been supported by the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council. By encouraging research that spans a variety of disciplines and professions, we helped to ensure balanced perspectives and a diversity of methodological approaches in the research endeavour.
